The truth about 100,000 Japanese prisoners during World War II

The U.S. government's proposed measures to ban WeChat and implement Internet cleaning measures have won many praise, but it has also been disturbed by some unknown truth or so-called "agents". The most common example is that some people oppose the countermeasures of the United States under the banner of "communication convenience", "human rights" or "freedom of speech". Public opinion believes that the mainland itself has blocked the Internet and banned, but carefully concocted all kinds of lies, long-term jurisdiction over overseas Chinese, brainwashing in a little way, with the intention of controlling, differentiated and kidnapping Chinese. Recently, there have been countless examples of tension between China and the United States. The typical brainwashing operation is to intimidate Chinese in the United States by taking the story of 100,000 Japanese people suffering from collective isolation from the United States. For example, the article that appears on WeChat: "If a serious conflict breaks out between China and the United States, can the Chinese in the United States really live a quiet life?", please see the attachment after this article.

If we carefully compare such articles discussing Japanese prisoners that appeared on the mainland five years ago, the general reports of those periods are still objective and highly credible. Today's media is manipulated by black hands, lies are nature, and there is no bottom line for forgery. Readers who generally do not understand history are often misled and deceived. This article refers to the article five years ago and the author's own long-term field trips and visits, and lists the truth for netizens' reference. In order to protect the original citation from being deleted, we will not list the source of the article, and we apologize hereby.

1) The historical truth

For the imprisonment of Japanese Americans during World War II, many people will naturally think of the situation of Germans at that time. The author of the attachment after the article couldn't find examples of German prisoners during World War II, so he had to treasure the stories of sporadic new immigrants during World War I as treasures, and cited several "examples" to speculate that "how many German Americans are detained in the United States, today it is unfounded and reliable. The only thing we know now One point is that 99.99% of these people are innocent. I'm afraid that readers associate the tragedy of the persecution of many returning Chinese in the 1950s, the tens of millions of people starved to death in three years of "natural" disasters, and the subsequent Cultural Revolution. The author wrote with a guilty heart: "For these dark history, the mainstream media in the United States is now deliberately forgotten, so ordinary Chinese people, or in the United States Chinese immigration is naturally unheard of, so they think that the United States has always been quiet and good, and only China has a hard time. Naturally, it is not strange.

The author then went straight to the point and turned to portray the Japanese prisoners, but never mentioned the cause of the incident and the real historical background. In fact, the fate of Japanese and Germans during World War II was very different. The German population is large, but not many people are fascists. Many U.S. generals were of German descent, and most of the Germans fought side by side with the new motherland, eventually defeating the fascists. In that era, there were indeed a very small number of German Greek fans, and their methods were also to manipulate new immigrants. However, he was quickly isolated and arrested, deprived of American citizenship, and was deported back to Germany after the war. Returning to his home country, he encountered a long-term liquidation fascism and continued to be in prison. He was more than twice as unlucky as German Turkish fans.

Immigrants from Germany and Japan are very different in religion and culture, and skin color is not a factor that determines treatment. Please see World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, the Middle East Heat War or later the 9/11 terrorist attacks. During these wars, Filipinos, Chinese, Vietnamese, Iranian, Arabs, etc., who repeated the situation of Japanese people at that time? The above-mentioned author deliberately covered up the truth of Germans, and said confidently: "Under the supervision of hundreds of thousands of American "Sunrise Aunts" and American "Red Guards", (Germans) enjoyed a thorough American "people's democratic dictatorship", and were regarded as American capitalists and black five categories, and American-style "cultural big In the "Revolution", they were transformed from the bone. In fact, many of the Germans were Protestants, quickly accepted the culture of the New World, and had already seen through Hitler's dictatorial trick of persecuting Jews in the name of religion. And Japanese people are deeply affected by East Asian culture, the dream of a great country, the dream of a bright king, the dream of a strong country, and the dream of common prosperity... In short, it is an early copy of the powerful country.

Like the Chinese, the Japanese at that time were also severely discriminated against. Their first-generation immigrants are not allowed to become American citizens and are not allowed to own land. After the passage of the Alien Land Law in 1924, Japanese people, like other Asians, basically stopped immigration, and even the land they bought in the past could not be owned. According to the 1940 census data, there are 126,947 Japanese living in the mainland of the United States, of whom 40,869 are "one" without American nationality. There are between 140,000 and 150,000 Japanese living in Hawaii. Among them, there are professionals, most of whom are small-sized businesses. There is no so-called Japanese prisoners. The main reason for the imprisonment of Japanese is to rob them of their astronomical fortune. Please see the following lies.

Due to the reason of "political correctness", both official and private, the tone has been set for the loyalty of the Japanese at that time. The gap between Japanese languages is like today's WeChat world. Many people's lives are strictly controlled by the community, which is under the jurisdiction of the Japanese consulate. After the war, there were Hollywood films that told such stories. So far, it is impossible to accurately estimate how many Japanese people were fans of the emperor at that time, and the number is not small. Some people go in and out of the consulate regularly for a long time, and also signal Japanese aircraft on the west coast, etc. The Japanese army occupied the Alyutian Islands of Alaska, and the intention to attack the west coast was very obvious. No one could deny the judgment that there were a large number of potential spies among the Japanese at that time. The Nihao Island incident, which occurred at the same time as the Pearl Harbor incident, is the main and direct cause of the imprisonment of Japanese people. Of course, the official articles of the Communist Party of China will not mention it. For details, please refer to the relevant articles of the micro-based encyclopedia:

https://zh.wikipedia.org/wiki/%E5%B0%BC%E8%B1%AA%E5%B2%9B%E4%BA%8B%E4%BB%B6

The United States has never denied that about 100,000 Japanese people were detained in 10 forced shelters during World War II. Some of them were considered "disloyal" in the loyalty test organized by the federal government because they answered "no" on two key questions. These people are detained in the isolation camp. Others were coerced by a small but quite influential pro-Japanese extremist group to give up their American citizenship. Their organization is called Hoshi Dan.

The establishment of the quarantine camp has indeed effectively cut off Japan's intelligence sources. Since the Meiji Restoration, Japan has planned immigration to foreign countries in large numbers. The Japanese military has arranged long-term hidden spies to collect intelligence and be loyal to the emperor. The reason why the Pearl Harbor surprise attack was possible was that the espionage activities of overseas Japanese in Hawaii played a big role. In fact, the Japanese government has indeed expanded its influence among Japanese Americans and developed intelligence personnel. For example, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs recruits young people under the age of 30 and have a high school education or above in Nisei (referring to the second generation of Japanese Americans, most of whom have American citizenship), and promises to let them become diplomats after graduation. In the selection, the title of the English thesis includes "About the New Order of East Asia", and requires the use of a printer to answer the questions - which is convenient for recording when listening to the broadcast in the future. Later, many of these Nisei entered the radio room of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and were responsible for monitoring the broadcasts of European and American allies; the deceptive propaganda broadcasts of the U.S. military during wartime, such as the famous "Tokyo Rose", were also broadcast by Nisei. After MacArthur led his army to occupy Japan, he liquidated some of Nisei's treasonous acts and deprived him (her) of American citizenship.

Please pay attention to the fact that the false propaganda of the Communist Party of China (see attachment) never mentions the main reasons for the imprisonment of Japanese, and deliberately mentions at the beginning of the article under the guise of Germans, deliberately mentioning that "the only thing we know now is that 99.99% of these people are innocent." The author was afraid that others could not understand it, so he wrote: "In fact, German immigrants and Japanese immigrants at that time were also complex, but when the United States and their home countries went to war, they were all treated equally and treated indiscrimiately." At the end of the article, the author showed all his horse's feet: "In fact, when we were marked as Chinese, our fates were connected, with both glory and loss. Only when the motherland is strong and the world is peaceful can we truly live a good life!"

The United States has long been aware of the coercion and infiltration of Japanese people. In 1936, according to Roosevelt's instructions, the FBI began to compile a list of dangerous people, including a considerable number of foreigners; in 1940, Congress passed the National Alien Registration Law, requiring all foreign citizens to register fingerprints and not allow them to hold firearms, explosives and wireless transmission devices; Japanese organizations according to the danger The degree of risk is divided into three categories: ABC. Because of such preparations, after the outbreak of the war, the United States immediately activated the wartime mechanism. Thousands of foreign citizens were detained on the same day of the Pearl Harbor incident, of which 737 were of Japanese. By January 1942, the FBI had arrested a total of 5,534 Japanese, 4,769 Germans and 2,262 Italians. At this time, the Japanese were arrested mainly leaders of some organizations and Japanese language school teachers.

According to statistics, "After the Pearl Harbor incident, the U.S. government first arrested and detained 1,291 Japanese on the 'blacklist' within two days, mainly community leaders and suspected 'spies'. Two months later, President Roosevelt issued Executive Order 9066, allowing anyone to be excluded from designated military areas. This became the legal basis for the U.S. government to later concentrate more than 100,000 Japanese in 10 detention camps across the country, because most of the states on the west coast were used as military areas for the war.

In modern times, it has been a common practice to expel or detain domestic enemy overseas Chinese during wartimes. For example, the Enemy Overseas Chinese Law promulgated by the United States in 1789 granted the president the power to expel and control enemy overseas Chinese. During World War I, Britain required Germans to leave the country within 7 days, and adult men who did not leave the country after the deadline were uniformly detained; France banned male Germans aged 17-55 from leaving the country and sheltered them in designated areas. After the outbreak of World War II, the International Red Cross proposed that countries should protect domestic enemy overseas in accordance with the provisions of the Convention on the Treatment of Prisoners in Wartime signed in 1929, and received a wide response.

In 1949, countries concluded the Fourth Geneva Convention aimed at protecting civilians, which formally stipulated the status and rights of enemy and overseas Chinese in wartime. According to the convention, after the war began, the enemy overseas Chinese in the warring countries had the right to leave the country with their belongings, and the enemy overseas Chinese who did not want to leave the country still enjoyed the rights of peacetime. However, when there is an absolute need for the security of the country, the enemy overseas Chinese can be detained or placed in a designated place. It can be seen that to this day, the detention of enemy overseas Chinese under special circumstances is still allowed by international law.

During World War II, the government of the Republic of China also controlled the enemy overseas Chinese. The Japanese are very similar in appearance to the Chinese, and it is very easy to act as a spy. In June 1938, a recruit in Guangdong Province was found to behave abnormally. After investigation, it was found that the recruit was a Japanese spy. By pretending to be a strong man, he mixed into the army to serve and found an opportunity to steal military intelligence. After that, the National Government formulated the "Order on the Method of Identifying Japanese", saying that the Japanese "cut off the body length and cut short" and "cannot utter the 'two' character in Mandarin Chinese" and so on. German and Italian diasporians are also specially monitored by the national government to prevent them from engaging in espionage. For example, in 1944-1946, the Kunming Police Bureau filed 16 cases and conducted open and secret visits to some German staff and missionaries in the territory, eliminating their suspicion of espionage one by one, which played a certain role in preventing the leakage of military intelligence.

While controlling Japanese people at home, the United States also helps South American countries to expel Japanese people. After 1940, Peru spread news such as "Japanese smuggling weapons" and "8,000 machine guns were hidden in Japanese flower shops". Peruvian officials provided information to the United States, saying that in early 1942, the Japanese tried to bribe Peruvian soldiers to engage in espionage. U.S. Vice President Wallace reported to Roosevelt, "There is reliable information that the Japanese in Peru will attack... strategic strongholds, thus destroying the important bases that the United States is building there." In the wartime state, this information attracted great attention from the U.S. government. In order to prevent trouble before it comes, the United States has increased its control over people of Japanese descent.

However, since 1943, the U.S. military has formed the Japanese American Legion. A total of more than 30,000 American Japanese participated in the U.S. Army in World War II. The most famous is the 442nd Japanese Infantry Regiment. This unit was discriminated against, but it was the infantry regiment with the highest casualty rate of the U.S. military in World War II. It was also the most honored unit in the history of the U.S. Army, and was reviewed by President Roosevelt many times. A total of 18,143 Japanese people in the 442nd Regiment were awarded various medals during World War II, including eight presidential collective commendations (the famous 101st Airborne Division of the U.S. Army only won twice in World War II, and the 1st Army Division only won three times in World War II). 21 Medals of Honor, 52 Crosses for Distinguished Service, 560 Silver Star Medals, 22 Legion Medals, 4,000 Bronze Star Medals and 9,486 Purple Heart Medals, etc. In the recent Middle East war, the 442nd Infantry Regiment fought again, including many Asian soldiers.

It must be pointed out that "collective imprisonment has protected these Japanese Americans to a certain extent. Because after the Pearl Harbor incident, many Americans were indignant and took out their anger on the Japanese in the United States. Many Chinese and Korean stores put up signs saying "We are not Japanese" to protect themselves. In fact, the same is true. Because they are imprisoned, the chance of being attacked is reduced. However, the conditions in the detention camp where they live are too rudimentary. However, there are basic human rights protections and freedom in the restricted area, which cannot be compared with the concentration camps in Germany and Japan.

During the war, Japan also detained the United States, Britain and other enemy overseas Chinese. After the outbreak of the Pacific War, the Japanese army occupied the Shanghai Concession and declared the citizens of the United States, Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium and other 16 countries as enemy overseas Chinese. Those who were over the age of 13 were required to wear red armbands, with letters representing their nationality, and were not allowed to enter cinemas, dance halls and other entertainment venues. At that time, there were 1,369 Americans and 5,865 British people in Shanghai. In January 1943, the Japanese army set up eight concentration camps in Shanghai and detained about 5,258 enemy overseas Chinese. At the height of the war, the Japanese army moved some old, young and sick enemy overseas Chinese to Yangshupu (which concentrated the main military and industrial facilities of the Japanese army) to prevent the U.S. military from bombing there. The United States protested against this, accusing the Japanese government of violating its commitment to abide by the Convention on the Treatment of Prisoners of War, not only causing "cruel treatment of detainees" but also putting them in danger. This practice is obviously much worse than that of the United States. The United States and Japan also exchanged enemy overseas Chinese. The day after the Pearl Harbor incident, the U.S. government proposed through Switzerland: "Is the Japanese government willing to exchange Japanese consular officials and diplomats, as well as important Japanese people who are blockaded in the United States, in exchange for U.S. consular officials and diplomats, and in Japan? , American citizens who have been blocked in China. The United States estimates that about 6,000 Americans were detained by Japan. Through two exchanges between 1942 and 1943, 2,700 Americans, 300 other Americans and 3,000 Japanese returned to China. Some of these people who were returned to Japan were from Japanese detention camps in the United States, who claimed their loyalty to Japan.

After the war, all walks of life in the United States reflected on the imprisonment of Japanese people at that time. The incident was not only written in textbooks, but also established many memorials. In 1976, President Ford issued a statement saying that "the evacuation at that time was wrong, and Japanese Americans were loyal American citizens then and now". On August 10, 1988, President Reagan signed a document formally apologizing for the detention camp for Japanese Americans in World War II, admitting that the Japanese residents were regarded as "foreign enemies" at that time out of wartime fanaticism and prejudice, and announced that 20,000 US dollars each of Japanese Americans who had been locked up in detention camps and were still alive. Compensation. On December 23, 2006, U.S. President Bush signed a bill, allocating $38 million to maintain the old site of the Japanese-American detention camp, and to study the history of that year, reminding people to reflect and always remember the lessons of history.

2) Chinese's choice

The Niho Island Incident, also known as the Battle of Niho Island, was an incident on December 7, 1941, when the pilot of the Imperial Japanese Naval Aviation Force, Nishikai Shigede, crashed on Niho Island, Hawaii after participating in the Pearl Harbor air raid. Because of this incident, Japanese-American residents assisted Japanese pilots to fight against the locals, which aroused public anger and became the main factor in the government's decision to forcibly imprison Japanese Americans during World War II. During World War II, will the tragic experience of Japanese people suffering from collective social isolation be repeated on Chinese people? This is indeed a topic that many people are concerned about.

Studying the history of the whole incident, the truth will tell us that in the possible Sino-American conflict in the future: "The vast number of anti-communist Chinese are a powerful decisive force to protect overseas Chinese. Those pink people who live in the United States and love the Party are just the big cancer of the Chinese community. The Communist Party of China's consistent strategy for overseas Chinese is to manipulate, differentiate, take advantage and kick away if necessary. From the early Southeast Asian Chinese exclusion, the Jin Wuyi incident in the United States, to the recent Tang Juan being kicked out of the consulate, there are countless examples. It is almost certain that any government with freedom and law will not allow long-term infiltration and manipulation by foreign governments. If a conflict occurs, the final expulsion and isolation are inevitable. Chinese society has the ability to protect its constitutional rights, as during the Korean War, but the premise must be to remove the cancer and not be kidnapped by evil forces.

There is no doubt that the hidden power of the Communist Party of China's over-limit war far surpassed that of Japanese fascism at that time, and its methods were also more cunning and bottomless. Knowledgeable people pointed out that "the United States should introduce laws as soon as possible to give surrender to all green card owners and citizens who have concealed their status as Communist Party members, give a grace period, and those who do not report will be sent to the centralized deportation area if they are verified. It is clear that the young pioneers, league members, trade unions, etc. who joined the underage period (18 years old) will not be prosecuted. The Communist Party of China media and individuals often deliberately let the wind, intending to confuse and kidnap all Chinese, including the latter categories of people, to blame themselves and mess with themselves.

3) Attachment (the propaganda article of the Communist Party of China in WeChat)

If a serious conflict breaks out between China and the United States, can the Chinese in the United States really live a quiet life?

Author: Romanism, Know the New Dimension

If a serious conflict breaks out between China and the United States, what kind of fate will the Chinese in the United States have?

Because an acquaintance who recently moved to the United States kept speaking in the WeChat circle, predicting that the Thucydides trap between China and the United States would not be out of it, and eventually a war would be inevitable. Then he felt that he was on the winning side. He could laugh at the spring flowers and autumn moon, enjoy the blue sky and white clouds, and live a leisurely life. As for the friends who stayed in China , then the only way is to ask for more blessings, so is his statement correct? Objectively speaking, he is too naive. If he had read more history, he should have known that he had actually stood on the edge of the cliff. Why would I say that? Because judging from the past performance of the United States, once there is a serious conflict between the United States and a country, it will absolutely suppress the overseas Chinese from that country in an all-round way. From the painful memories of German Americans in World War I to the tragic experience of Japanese Americans in World War II, we can To know this. In the First World War, German immigrants and overseas Germans, under the supervision of hundreds of thousands of American "Sunrise Aunts" and American "Red Guards", enjoyed a thorough American "people's democratic dictatorship". They were regarded as American capitalists and black five categories. In the American-style "Cultural Revolution", they entered It has been transformed. These American "patriotic masses" who are responsible for supervising German immigrants are all an official organization under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Bureau of Investigation established in 1909. It is called the "American Protection Alliance" with about 250,000 members. Their main task is to monitor whether the German-American families around them are still When using German, have you ever peeked at German books or even corresponded with Germans? They can turn over these people's letters at will, break into their homes to search, and send their families to the "public security" organs for examination of those German Americans who they think are suspicious. Among them, the "crimes" are serious, and they will even be locked up in concentration camps. So why can they do this? ? ? The barracks in the German detention camp in the hot springs of North Carolina in 1917? According to David. M. According to Kennedy's book "Here: World War I and American Society", the U.S. government has successively passed the Espionage Act and the Incitement to Rebellion Act in order to completely repair German Americans without restraint, which stipulates that anyone who, once he is unfaithful to the U.S. government, the flag and the constitution, blaphemous or Insulting remarks are all illegal acts, so why can the U.S. government do whatever it wants with these two bills? Because these two bills are full of vague boundaries, what is "infidelity"? What is "blaspheme"? There is no clear definition, and it can be played arbitrarily. Therefore, speaking German has become disloyal to the United States. Reading German books is naturally blaphemy against the United States. Even stewing a German pork knuckle at home may be intended to subvert the United States and attract a group of American "patriotic masses" or "Red Guards" to move to German. The people's punches and kicks, and a re-education that touches the soul. ? In 1918, a group of people gathered at Baraboo High School in Wisconsin to gather German books for burning? At that time, the U.S. Bureau of Investigation set up hundreds of auxiliary agencies to monitor German Americans, according to Russell. The scar documentary written by Kazar is the introduction in the book "Becoming an Old Man: The Paradox of German American Identity", even in larger American private companies, there are institutions specializing in monitoring German Americans, and then through these institutions, they can unscrupulously persecute German Americans. This persecution reaches How large is it? Also according to the records of this book, 18,725 "bad elements" were found in Philadelphia alone in just one year of the United States's participation in the war; according to Frederick. C. According to the record in Lübeck's Covenant of Loyalty: German Americans and World War I, there were 6,481 "dangerous elements" sent to concentration camps in Grocesester in New Jersey alone. As for how many German Americans were imprisoned in the United States, there is no reliable evidence today. The only thing we know now The point is that 99.99% of these people are innocent. Not only did the official not soften the German Americans, but the civil society in the United States was also in mania. At that time, if someone dared to speak German in public, it would attract the beating of the "patriotic masses". In April 1918, a man named Robert. The German miner in Prag was hanged by a group of thugs in the street because he couldn't speak English, and none of them was held accountable afterwards. If you think that the situation of German Americans was bad enough in the First World War, then in World War II, Japanese Americans were treated inhumanely. They were directly locked up in concentration camps, which was extremely miserable, Jenny. W. Houston's famous novel "Farewell, Manzana" records the deep harm caused by the U.S. authorities to Japanese Americans, which have suffered major physical and mental traumas and could not be calmed down for many years after the war.

Of course, for these dark history, the mainstream media in the United States are deliberately selectively forgotten, so ordinary Chinese people, or Chinese immigrants in the United States, are naturally unheard of. Therefore, they think that the United States has always been quiet and good, and only China has a year of suffering, which is naturally not enough. It's strange. Some people may say, well, even if you are telling the truth, the United States has indeed persecuted enemy overseas Chinese in history, but Chinese are different. First of all, their composition is very complex. There are not only the Qing people who went to the United States since the Qing Dynasty, the Kuomintang remnants who fled after the Civil War, mainland immigrants after the reform and opening up, and There are businessmen from Hong Kong and Taiwan. Even if history is repeated in the future, the U.S. government will definitely treat them separately, right? What's more, there are so-called "people's activists" here. They are the slo-so-so cult members. They themselves are the lackeys of the U.S. government. Is there anything else to worry about? Will they need to worry in the future? To be honest, I am not a fairy, but looking back on the history of the United States, in fact, German immigrants and Japanese immigrants at that time were also complicated. But when the United States and their home country went to war, they were all treated equally and treated indiscrimiately. First of all, we must know that Germany was founded in 1870, but the earliest "German" Americans, as early as 1620, came to New Amsterdam in North America, which later became New York City, earlier than the founding of the United States. Before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War in North America, there were 30 Tens of thousands of "German" immigrants, these people, and Germany, which was established more than 100 years later, had no relationship and did not have any sense of identity. After all, they were still vassals of the Holy Roman Empire at that time.

Secondly, a large part of the "Germans" who came to the United States were political refugees and religious refugees. Especially in 1848, a revolution against authoritarianism broke out in Greater Germany, including Prussia, Austria. Later, they were brutally suppressed. After the defeat, a large number of "Germans" fled to the United States. These people are all completely liberals. From the inside out, they have no good impression of the later Germany, but are full of identity with the United States. So how can Chinese people compare with German Americans if the composition is more complicated? But when the United States participated in World War I in 1917, all German-speaking or German-born Americans were treated indiscriminately! You should know that the difference between Germans and the British is very small. They are both Protestants and white. Their understanding of each other far exceeds their understanding of Chinese people. Since they can all be one-size-fits-all "Germans", how can they treat Chinese differently? Some people may have questions again why the main military generals of the United States, including Eisenhower, Nimitz, etc., were all German Americans during World War II. They were not only not persecuted, but also became the backbone of the United States. How to explain this? To figure out this phenomenon, we need to do everything from U.S. President Theodore. Roosevelt talked about it, that is, during World War II, another one named Franklin. President Roosevelt's uncle, many of the main forces in the political arena of the United States, are political families, just like the later Kennedy and Bush families. According to William. H. Theodore written by Harper. According to Roosevelt, the United States once encountered an unprecedented challenge at the beginning of the 20th century, that is, the challenge of German culture to English culture. What's the matter? As we mentioned earlier, "Germans" began to immigrate to the United States very early. Although they came almost empty-handed, "Germans" were very hard-working and serious, so they could always accumulate wealth as soon as possible, and they especially liked to engage in agricultural production, so soon the United States Some farms in the Midwest have become German industries. Therefore, the vast majority of "German" immigrants in the United States are above the middle class, and these relatively stereotyped people are also more willing to abide by order. Therefore, they are a group of people with the lowest crime rate in American society. Therefore, they are exemplary citizens of the United States and are respected by American society, a bit like today's Chinese Americans in the United States. Not only that, from the late 19th century to the early 20th century, the German-speaking region began to lead in culture and science and technology, with famous philosophers such as Hegel and Kant, writers and musicians such as Heine, Bach and Beethoven, and famous scientists such as Einstein, Planck and Renchen, especially After the reunification of Germany, Germany's economy developed rapidly and became the second largest in the world, so German culture began to be popular in the United States. Before World War I, there were 450 German newspapers in the United States, and 500,000 people learned German every year, forming mainstream values for the United States and challenging the Anglo-Saxon English culture, which made then President of the United States Theodore. Roosevelt was very nervous. He felt that if it continued to develop like this, the United States would become revisionist, split and change the world. So what should he do? So the "100% Americanism" movement took its debut, according to Theodore. Roosevelt said: "We have the right to make immigrants and their descendants pure Americans." So what kind of talent is a pure American? In his opinion, it is necessary to speak the language of Americans, eat the food of Americans, read the books written by Americans, think about the problems of Americans, and completely disconnect from the home country. Only such people can be considered real Americans. However, although theodore. The mainstream society in the United States led by Roosevelt launched this movement, but with little effect, because the main object they wanted to transform, the German Americans did not buy their account, because after all, the coolest revolutionary book at that time was written by Marx, the most awesome philosophical thought was created by Hegel, and the most magical scientific theory was Ein. The best music invented by Stan was composed by Beethoven. These are all Germans, so if you want German Americans to give up German and German culture, it is logically untenable at all, not to mention that Germans like to talk about logic the most. Therefore, although the mainstream society in the United States has broken its mouth, German Americans are still doing their own thing, and their influence is getting bigger and bigger. Theodore Roosevelt finally understood that revolution is not a treat to dinner, and it can't always be warm and silent. It must launch a thorough cultural revolution to sweep away all the bulls and ghosts. God. But although I think so, it's not easy to do it, because the United States is a democratic society after all, which emphasizes the freedom of everyone, what language others speak, what kind of culture they like, whether to drink dark beer, and whether to eat stewed pork knuckle is not something that the President of the United States can control, so although the leader is led by Theodore Roosevelt The mainstream society in the United States is anxious, but they have nothing to do. However, the outbreak of World War I gave them an opportunity. If the United States could join the Ally and launch a war against Germany, it could launch a vigorous cultural revolution and put the United States on the right track. The view of the then U.S. President Wilson on this point was exactly the same as that of Theodore Roosevelt. They wanted to take the opportunity of this war to shape a pure American nation and create a common value. All Americans, no matter where they come from, must believe in Americanism 100%. In order to achieve this goal, they must set up a "Central Cultural Revolution Group", which is composed of the famous dung reporter, George. The only task of the U.S. Public Information Commission led by Corell is to ensure that the United States has only one voice, that is, to make everyone realize that Germany and German culture are the public harm of the whole world, and the United States must play the role of superheroes and uphold world justice. So in George. Under the leadership of Corell, all the mainstream media in the United States began to rake the dung of Germans and examined them under a magnifying glass, and did not hesitate to exaggerate or even fabricate the crimes of Germans to create a public opinion basis for the United States to participate in the war. Even Hollywood, which had just emerged at that time, took the initiative to join this public opinion war. They consciously ensured The worst bad guy in every movie must be a German. At the same time, the U.S. government has launched all kinds of suppressions against those media that are uncooperate or neutral. According to the instructions of U.S. President Wilson, if you don't listen to you, we can only give you a trick. As a result, a large number of media were shut down. According to the Boston Globe Daily, on February 26, 1915 alone, the 50 most influential German newspapers in the country were forcibly closed by the government for various reasons. If you want to find an opportunity with peace of mind, there will always be opportunities. When Germany announced that it would enter the unlimited submarine war, the United States immediately couldn't wait to join the war. Now that it has joined the war, the Cultural Revolution that transformed American society can also begin. So there are the two laws we mentioned before, speaking German, reading German books, and learning German culture, are all distorted as disloyalty to the United States, according to Tina. Stuart. According to Blackbell's book From "German Day to "100% Americanism", on the day when the United States announced its participation in the war, German Americans all over the United States were at their jobs and received warnings from their bosses or local patriotic organizations: "Speak English, not German, or we will Throw it out!" Next, the old one began. Large-scale activities to burn German books began all over the United States. Then they closed German schools, changed the name of places named in German, and changed many towns that were originally called Berlin to Lincoln. The parishes where Germans gathered were not allowed to preach in German, and the band did not play Bedo. The movement of Fen and Mozart. The next step is to mobilize the masses to establish the "American Protection Alliance", let the Chaoyang aunts monitor every move of German Americans, let the Red Guards touch their souls with their fists, and those who do not repent, directly put them in concentration camps to let them know the power of the American-style "democratic dictatorship". Although this movement did not last long, it fully achieved the effect. Only one year after the United States joined the war, German and German culture basically disappeared in the United States. Although soon after, the mainstream society in the United States felt that the goal had been achieved and corrected these "extreme left" behaviors, but stayed in Germany The shadow in the heart of Americans is too deep. Since then, the vast majority of people have "consciously and voluntarily" drawn a line with Germany. Therefore, when World War II broke out, more than 20 years had passed. All traces of Germany had long been wiped out. The United States no longer had "Germanic" Americans, only those Americans with "Germanic faces", just like today's U.S. President Trump, although he was also A German American, but his favorite thing is to drink Coca-Cola, eat hamburgers, and play golf. Except for his blonde hair, he can't find a shadow of German culture on his body. The transformation of German Americans in the United States is very successful. The originator of this movement, Theodore Roosevelt, the inventor of "100% Americanism", was highly regarded in American history and was recognized as the creator of the modern American nation. His ideas have been passed down to this day, so he was engraved on the President's Hill in the United States with Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln, but in There was no place for Chinese people in the American nation he conceived. In 1902, he abolished the time limit of the Chinese exclusion bill, in to trying to exclude Chinese people from the American nation forever. Speaking of this, everyone may have another question, that is, if the U.S. government launched an unprecedented persecution of German Americans during World War I in order to defend the absolute leadership of Angcrusson culture, then why did all Japanese Americans be locked up in World War II? Where is Zhongying? Japan's large-scale immigration to the United States was divided into two stages. The first stage was from the Meiji Restoration to before the Sino-Japanese War. At that time, although Japan began to learn from the West, its economic development had been slow and the population pressure was also great. Therefore, from 1868, Japan began to immigrate out in a planned way, mainly It is divided into official-organized immigration to Hawaii and private spontaneous immigration to the United States, especially in California. However, the first stage of immigration soon encountered trouble, because the United States passed the Chinese Exclusion Act in 1882, which restricted Chinese workers from entering the United States and began to restrict the entry of Japanese. As the atmosphere of racial discrimination in the United States was getting stronger and stronger at this time, the Japanese, who were already in the United States, were also marginalized. This situation did not improve until 1905, when Japan won a great victory in the Russo-Japanese War.

Japanese-American families lined up outside the civilian dispatch station in the Great Hall of the Japanese-American Society, waiting to be handled.? However, although the Japanese won face in this war, they lost. In order to win the war, Japan did its best to spend an astronomical amount of war funds, but it was not able to get war reparations, which made Japan's economy collapse frequently. In order to alleviate domestic contradictions, Japan once again increased its overseas migration. The strength of the people, especially the immigration to South America, for example, Peru once had a president named Tensen, who was the descendant of Japanese immigrants. In order to avoid other countries imitating the attitude of the United States towards the Japanese, Japan began negotiations with the United States, requiring the other party to give up restrictions on the entry of Japanese and to protect the rights of Japanese who have already entered the country. However, this condition put forward by Japan is very difficult for the United States. Considering that Japan has been promoted to the ranks of powerful countries, the United States cannot afford to show face. However, due to domestic pressure and the unprecedented atmosphere of racial discrimination, the United States cannot allow Japanese immigration. In the face of this dilemma, the two sides actually opened a brain and solved this problem. They decided to sign a gentleman's agreement. On the surface, the United States abolished the immigration restrictions on Japan, but the Japanese government wanted to secretly control the number of people going to the United States, which could not exceed 200 people per year. However, the Japanese did not strictly abide by this agreement. Through a method called photo bride, they used the matchmaking agency to send photos to those Japanese bachelors who went to the United States in their early years. Through marriage, a large number of Japanese women entered the United States, which caused a significant increase in the number of Japanese in the United States, causing the United States to The dissatisfaction of racists, another immigration bill was passed in 1924, completely prohibiting Asians from immigrating to the United States. After the Japanese entered the United States, they also did some heavy physical work at first, but Asians can endure hardships after all, so soon they earned their first barrel of gold. Then, according to the habits of Asians, they began to buy land in the United States and became farmers. With their intelligence, the Japanese succeeded in dry and water-scracking Other states, California, have developed beet cultivation and fruit cultivation. According to Zhang Jianwei's "The Journey and Reasons for the Japanese Moving to the United States from 1885 to 1929", in 1909, the Japanese owned 2,277 commercial places in the western states of the United States. In 1913, the Japanese owned one-third of the planting area in Idaho and Utah. It has one-tenth of the planting area. Today, the most famous citrus in California was developed by Japanese Americans. Japanese Americans once owned 1/3 of California's farmland, which aroused the extreme attention of white American farmers. Moreover, because of their good management, they could always pay higher prices to buy land, which made white farmers even more angry. It's. Therefore, in order to curb competition from Japanese Americans, these white farmers in the west marched everywhere to make trouble, and then pressured legislators. Therefore, in 1913, the California Legislature passed the Alien Land Law, prohibiting Japanese people from continuing to buy land. Then Oregon and Washington also passed similar bills, because It's the overseas Japanese who have threatened national security. Doesn't it sound a little familiar?!

Therefore, before the outbreak of World War II, the large number of farms and land owned by Japanese Americans had been coveted by white consortiums in the western states. They wanted to directly rob these properties, but at that time, Japan was one of the top five in the world, and the United States was not the world's boss, so they still had some concerns. Dare to do it directly. After Japanese militarism attacked Pearl Harbor, senators from the western states immediately encouraged then-President Franklin. Roosevelt, deal with these Japanese Americans harshly. Some states forced them within 24 hours, and some states forced them to sell all their property within 48 hours, and then report to the concentration camp. Of course, this is naked robbery. ? On Bainbridge Island, Washington State, a Japanese farmer and his daughter looked at the strawberry farm they had to abandon? Here I must emphasize that in fact, the Japanese who immigrated to the United States were all the poorest peasants at the bottom of Japan. They immigrated to the United States because they could not live in Japan. These people have no good feelings for Japan, but love the United States very much. Most of the so-called militarists in Japan are the samurai class, both The beneficiers basically stay in China and have nothing to do with these people. Americans actually know this, but in order to plunder their assets, they still blame them. Today, many friends who travel to California will go to various wineries to visit the process of grape planting and winemaking. By the way, they will have a few drinks, and then listen to those blonde-eyed owners, pat their chests to assure you that these are their ancestral foundations and culture that have been inherited for hundreds of years, but this is likely to be a lie. The real situation is that this It was their ancestors who bought it from those Japanese Americans at the price of one thousandth or one thousandth. Some people may say that the U.S. government did not correct the mistake later? Indeed, in 1948, they were compensated for a total of 34 million US dollars in property losses, but Japanese Americans in California alone had 220,000 acres of land and 5,135 farms, and the annual output value of these farms reached 30 to 35 million US dollars. It was really innocent, Huai Bi Its sin! (This data comes from Deng Shusheng's America and Immigration, Chongqing Publishing House.) Some people may say that didn't President Reagan give another $20,000 to everyone alive in 1988? Is the United States still good? Alas, how to say, rob you of a cow, give you an egg after 40 years, and make you grateful. This is probably American justice! Some people may say that what you are talking about is the old past. Now the United States has moved towards diversification, and black people have become presidents. These things should never happen again. So even if there is another terrible conflict between China and the United States today, the Chinese in the United States will definitely live a quiet life, isn't it? Is that so? Yes, the United States is indeed progressing, but its direction of progress is full of doubts. It is moving towards a populist society with a crowd from a democratic communist society ruled by the elite, which Trump's coming to power illustrates. Although elite rule is full of conspiracies and calculations, it at least knows what it is doing and can be predicted. But if democracy meets populism, it is not far from mobir politics, and no one knows what it will do. Hitler came to power by inciting populism and using democratic elections. Then he turned Germany into a paradise for mobs. The virtual act of slaughtering 6 million Jews could only be done in a populist society. There is no bottom line in mob politics. Therefore, compared with the "old" United States in the past, I am more worried about the "new" United States now. Thinking that Trump just shouted "China virus", how many yellow-skinned people are beaten on the streets of the United States. If there is really a conflict between China and the United States, will the Chinese people in the United States really "spring flowers bloom" everywhere? Don't be too naive! The purpose of writing this article is not to curse or laugh at anyone, but to let everyone know more about history and think more comprehensively. In fact, when we were marked as a Chinese, our fate was connected. We were both glorious and lost. Only the motherland is strong and the world is peaceful. Only then can we truly live a quiet life!
